May's Brisk Home Sales Set Post-Recession Records

- After a brief dip in April home sales, the U.S. housing market returned to seasonally high sales in May, increasing 20.6 percent from the previous month and 4.3 percent from May 2016, according to the RE/MAX National Housing Report released today.
- The average number of Days on Market dropped to a record low of 51, consistent with the Months Supply of Inventory shrinking to 2.6 months.
- Over two-thirds of the metro areas experienced an increase in transactions.
- The May 2017 Median Sales Price of $232,500 was the second highest in the history of the report, only behind the August 2008 Media Sales Price of $236,062.
- Decreasing 16.2 percent from May 2016, inventory continued to decline year-over-year. This is the 103rd consecutive month of year-over-year declines dating back to October 2008.
- The U.S. continues to enjoy rising home values as 52 of the 53 metro areas experienced a price increase.

“In May, we saw an uptick of both loan applications and home sales, which is encouraging in terms of more people getting into the market for homes,” said Adam Contos, RE/MAX Co-CEO. “We don’t expect that the Federal Reserve’s announcement on Wednesday to raise interest rates a quarter of a point will greatly affect the market’s momentum. But housing demand only intensifies the tug-of-war with tight inventories driving prices up.”

- According to Zillow Mortgage Rate Ticker, 30-year fixed mortgage rates have risen for first time in five weeks to 3.71 percent.
- The rate for a 15-year fixed home loan is currently 2.97 percent, while the rate for a 5-1 adjustable-rate mortgage (ARM) is 2.95 percent.

“Mortgage rates edged higher last week, the first weekly increase since early May, mostly in response to slight changes to the European Central Bank’s forward-looking statements, which reduced downward pressure on U.S. rates,” said Erin Lantz, vice president of mortgages at Zillow. “This week the FOMC meeting statement due Wednesday is the headline event. A rate hike is largely priced into markets already, but changes to the outlook could move rates.”
