Are second ‘staycation’ homes a trend in your city? Here’s how to take advantage

They say a change is as good as a rest. Across the country, a trend is happening for the comfortably off to buy second (or third) homes in the same metro area -- packing up their things and leaving the family home on Friday for a weekend away in another part of town with no chores to worry about. Just a change of scene and no traffic hassles. They are typically only driving around half an hour or 40 minutes away -- with busy working lives, many don't have the tolerance for the traffic grind heading out of these big cities on weekends. And flying to get away is also losing its appeal, with airport security measures and the hassle of getting to and fro. If there's an area nearby with a totally different vibe, why not? In a recent report, WalletHub said certain cities are better f...
