

Why 'Uberization' and tech will never trump quality agents

One of the biggest myths I've found in the real estate tech world is that of the imminent "Uberization of real estate." Simply put, this theory claims that technology will disrupt the real estate industry by directly matching buyers and sellers (like Uber does with drivers and riders), thus eliminating the need for the real estate agent.

Source: click here