Late DJ Avicii's Hollywood Hills home secretly sells for $17.5M

Four months after Avicii's tragic death, the Hollywood Hills home of the famed Swedish DJ and electronic music producer has sold off market for $17.5 million.

Courtesy of Zillow

The modern home, which was built in 2008 and in which 28-year-old Avicii would spend considerable time until his death, went to an unidentified buyer in an off market deal, the L.A. Times first reported.

Google Maps

After gaining a devoted popular following with songs such as “Le7els” and “Wake Me Up,” the DJ purchased the house in L.A.’s high-end Bird Streets neighborhood for $15.55 million back in 2013.

Courtesy of McLean Design

Avicii, who was born with the name Tim Bergling and helped popularize the electronic music genre, passed away in an apparent suicide while visiting the capital of Oman in April.

Courtesy of McLean Design

The Real Deal reported that David Weise, a business manager who once worked with the musician, was still connected to the property in June. While the house has been sold off the market and with scant listing photos, Bergling would often post photos of himself and his friends spending time in it on his Instagram account.

Friends of Mine ????

A post shared by Avicii (@avicii) on Nov 18, 2017 at 8:30am PST

In the last Instagram photo posted two weeks before his death, Avicii stands over the tiles of the home as a grand piano and a view of the city dot the background.

????????It’s always sunny in California????????

A post shared by Avicii (@avicii) on Apr 4, 2018 at 12:55pm PDT

Email Veronika Bondarenko

Source: click here