Report defends multiple listings services from government intervention

A new white paper released today from The Council of Multiple Listing Services ahead of the June 5 government workshop on competition in real estate, argues that the real estate industry does not need any government intervention to help get listing data distributed widely and that the nature of multiple listing services (MLS) inherently breeds competition.

Source: click here