Trump’s ex-campaign head may have to forfeit these luxe properties

Today federal authorities charged President Trump’s former campaign chairman Paul Manafort of wiring millions of dollars from offshore accounts. He allegedly did this to avoid taxes and purchase very expensive real estate (among other items).

Should Manafort be found guilty, the U.S. will seek forfeiture of four of his properties that span across New York and Virginia. Here’s a peek inside — and what they appear to be worth, according to Zillow.

377 Union Street, Brooklyn, New York, 11231 ($4.4M)

29 Howard Street, #4D, New York, New York, 10013 ($4.3M)

Manafort used this property, 29 Howard St., #4D, New York, NY 10013, to launder money, which was allegedly paid for with money from Cyprus and used for Airbnb rent money and tax breaks.

10 reasons most real estate agents fail

Imagine if a deadly disease hit earth causing a mortality rate even remotely near the failure rate of real estate agents -- people would live in complete, utter panic. The failure rate in real estate is high — extremely high. Many people who were in your real estate class are unlikely to be in the business five years from now ... READ MORE
